WORK BEGUN ON BUILDING

J. C. Penney Will Occupy Store In Broadway Block

Gus Waller, Redwood City contractor, this week began work on the erection of a building on the corner of Broadway and Hamilton street for the General Properties Company, builders of the Sequoia block. The new building will be similar in construction to that occupied by the Woolworth store and by the Lock Drug Co. It will adjoin the recently completed Sequoia Theatre building and will complete the frontage of this block on Broadway.

The architecture of the new building will correspond with that of the other two buildings on this block, forming when completed, a complete and harmonious frontage the entire length of the block.

The General Properties Co have given a 17 year lease on the new building to the J. C. Penney Co. who will open a store there as soon as the building is completed. In addition to the Penney store, which will have a frontage on both. Broadway and Hamilton street, the plans call for two smaller stores, facing Hamilton street.

The stores are to be completed by May 1st. The estimated cost of the structure is $30,000.

New Service Offered Here By Phone Co.

"What is the time?"

The old cry of the man who forgot to wind his clock last night or has none to wind, will find an answer if he has a telephone.

Beginning this morning, the Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Co. will give the time of day to all who ask, it was made known yesterday by Manager L. C. Brown.

In order to learn the time of day, it is only necessary to lift the receiver from the hook and call the operator, or in offices with dial telephones, to dial operator.

"This time giving is in accordance with our policy of continuously improving and broadening our service," said Mr. L. C. Brown yesterday. "It has been our desire to render this service, but the rapid growth of other demands on telephone facilities has made it impractical. We are now equipped to go ahead with it, and it is with pleasure that we make this announcement to all our customers in Redwood City.

ANNUAL OLDER BOYS' CONVENTION FEB 8-10

One of the biggest events of the year for older boys 15 to 18 years of age will be the Twenty-first Annual Older Boys' Conference of Northern California to be held under the direction of the Young Men's Christian Association at San Jose on Friday, Saturday and Sunday, Feb. 8-10th.

Because of certain definite physical limitations the usual number of 500 or 600 outstanding high school fellows will have to be cut to a maximum of 350 this year. This means that the number of boys who wil be permitted to go from each locality wil be cut down about 50 percent.

A Letter To An Eastern Friend

January 30, 1929

My Dear:
Since you have often asked me
Why in Redwood I choose to dwell,
I'll try to make it plain to see
And a few good reasons tell.

The climate is the very best,
This I've told to you before,
Such is proved by government test,
To say more would be to bore.

An attractive little town
Within a perfect setting.
Fast gaining in renown
And recognition getting.

Business growing in every way,
New theatre, new shops and stores.
More possibilities seen each day,
Opportunities are here galore.

Now tell me, have I said enough
To make you fully understand
That no place else is good enough
To make me leave this strip of land.

TIMES GAZETTE PUTS ON A NEW STYLE TYPE

Latest Improvement Is Distinct Benefit To Newspaper Readers; Neat and Easy To Read By All

CONCEDED TO BE THE LAST WORD IN EQUIPMENT

Praised by Eye Men — Comment Shows New Type Face Means Much Less Strain in Reading

Readers of today's Times-Gazette are privileged to observe an improvemtn ordered exclusively for their benefit. The Times-Gazette puts on today an entirely new dress of body type — a type designed to be more easly read and at the same time conserve space and preserve neatness of appearance.

This new face is the result of twenty years of experimenting by the greatest type experts in the country, after long and exhaustive discussions with oculists, opticians and doctors. It is larger and clearer than the old type. It is easier to read. It means less strain on eyes of the reader.

The Times-Gazette has taken another and important step in the modernization of its plant. This new type is the most readable ever designed by type makers. It is the last word in newsprint type.

Hundreds of American newspapers have adopted the new type within the last year. They are in the main metropolitan papers, such as the New York World, Washington Post, Los Angeles Times, New Orleans Tribune, Kansas City Star, Philadelphia Record and the New York Eevening Post.

To make the change in the Times-Gazette's plant has involved the scrapping of old matrices (or type casting dies) and other equipment. But the publishers of the Times-Gazette have taken the forward step in complete confidence that their legion of friends, the readers of the Times-Gazette, will approve and be benefited by it. We bid farewell to the old type not without a little regret; it has rendered good service in spreading the news of this community. But sentiment cannot prevail against progress and superiority. Se here is the Times-Gazette in new dress.

HEARING ON MENLO RECALL

Attorneys Will Submit Authorities

Hearing on the alternative writ of mandate issued by the District Court of Appeals last month, was set for last Monday. The writ was directed to the trustees of the City of Menlo Park to show cause why an election should not be called to recall two of the members of the board of trustees. At the hearing on Monday appeared Archer Kincaid for the proponents of the petition, while George Whitworth, city attorney of Menlo Park ,represented the trustees and the two members sought to be removed. Whitworth filed a demurrer which was overruled by the court. He then filed an answer in which he set up the claim that many of the signatures to the recall petition were secured by misrepresentation and misstatements and that the said petition was invalid and fraudulent and of no force and effect. After denying Whitworth's request for the appointment of a referee to take testimony the court allowed the attorney five days to submit authorities on his position that the court could take testimony as to the validity of the recall petition, and that aonther tribunal was not necessary. The matter comes up tomorrow when the authorities will be presented. The case will most likely will be taken under advisement.

LAST GAME OF SEASON

Sequoia Team Meets Palo Alto Cagers

With the last game of the year to be played on the home court tonight, the Cherokee basketballers have been working hard in order to put over an exhibition of first class playing. In addition to its being the last game here, the opponents are the traditional rivals of Sequoia, Palo Alto, and the game may mean the championship for the 130's.

In the previous game of the season, the Altans, the 30's won by a good score, while the unlimiteds lost by one point in a fast game, and consequently there will be plenty of scrap exhibited by both teams.

The Palo Alto unlimiteds have not yet been defeated, the nearest they have come to being beaten being the Sequoia game, and the contest between the big boys should be full of action.

This year, for the first time in several years, both the 30's and the unlimiteds of the Purple and White are good teams, previous to now there being usually one team good and the other team not so good.

This game occurs tonight, and the admission wil be 35 cents for adults.

"It is expected that we shall discuss new or different methods of teaching and give ideas which we have formed for the new year," Mr. Gelber said.

It is probable that the bill which Assemblyman Van Bernard of Glenn county has introduced in the Assembly, providing for a fund for music contests, will be dicussed. This bill calls for an appropriation of $25,000, to be known as the high school musical fund, and the funds would ge taken from the State high school money.

SEQUOIA MAY ENTER CONTEST

Representatives Plan Part In New York Meet

An opportunity that is presented to few high school students has come up before the members of the high school, and the occasion is that of the contest to be held in New York soon, for high school papers.

The trustees of the high school, in addition to Mr. A. C. Argo, the principal, and the faculty members, think that it is a good idea that three repretesentatives from Sequoia be sent to New York to represent the Sequoia Times at the contest, which will be held at Columbia University, Friday and Saturday, March 8 and 9, and if the necessary funds can be obtained, the project will be carried through.

It is though that about seven hundred dollars would suffice to see the three representatives, who would be Miss Eunice Schmidt, advisor and journalism instructor; Wendell Peterson, editor-in-chief of the Times, and Stanley Netherton, business manager.

The trip, of course, would furnish a great deal of desirable publicity for Sequoia, and it is hoped that the citizens of Redwood City will get behind the high school in this proposition.

Plans Approved For Broadway

Sidewalks Will Be Reduced in Width

The protests of a number of property owners on Broadway against the removal of three feet from the sidewalks on each side of the street between Washington street and Main street in order to widen the pavement, were withdrawn at the meeting of the city council Monday evening. The plans and specifications of the city engineer for this proposed widening as well as for the widening of Main street as far south as Maple street and for the erection of electroliers along Broadway and Main street will be accepted at the next meeting of the council.

The protesting property owners together with the city engineer visited other cities where sidewalks of eight feet are maintained and decided that this width would be sufficient for the needs of this city.

CALIFORNIA NEWS BRIEFS

Witnesses drawn from the peninsular manufacturers and business men's groups testifying at the Interstate Commerce Commission's hearing in San Francisco recently supported the Southern Pacific's opposition to the new railroad which the Western Pacific wants to build to Redwood City. Belief that two railroads on the peninsula would harm, rather than help, industrial development was expressed by W. W. Davis, vice-president of a wire rope manufacturing concern of South San Francisco.

Setting a new weight record for western airmail cargoes, a Boeing Air Transport tri-motored plane landed at the Oakland airport recently with 1400 pounds of mail. Larger cargoes of mail have been carried in the east but this was the heaviest consignment that has ever left Salt Lake City for a Pacific coast airport. Jack Sharpnack and Claire Vance were pilots of the machine.

The Carter bill, authorizing Secretary of the Treasurer Mellon to give the historic coast guard cutter Bear to the city of Oakland, was passed by the House of Representatives in Washington and has been sent to the Senate. Introduced by Representative Albert E. Carter, the measure provides that the famous old ship be used for a museum and for exhibition purposes without charge or admission. The Bear possessing one of the most romantic histories of any ship in the world, was taken from active service when the new cutter Northland was put into the Alaska and Arctic run. No site for the Bear has been selected as yet. It will be placed somewhere along the Oakland waterfront, however.

The total value of the mineral production of California for the year 1928 is conservatively estimated by the statistical division of the state division of mines and mining under the direction of Walter W. Bradley, state mineralogist, to have been approximately $353,444,500. The estimtaed total of $353,444,500 is a decrease of approximately $13,300,000 from the value of the 1927 production. The drop is due mainly to petroleum, and in smaller measure to gold, zinc, lead and brick. Although there was a decrease of approximately only 1,000,000 barrels in the quantity of crude oil, the total value will probably show around $19,000,000 less, owing to lower average prices effective

Lambs and the younger generation are not the only ones who go astray in these days, the bureau of fisheries has declared. For, although traditionally it is only one lamb out of 100 which loses its way, millions of young salmon and other fish are now lost in irrigation canals and diversion ditches as they migrate seaward in California streams, a report states. To keep them on the straight and narrow paths to the sea, the fish are now being given "screen tests" but not the Hollywood kind. The latest device which may be adopted creates an electric zone through which the fish will not pass, according to Shirley Baker, San Francisco engineer, who has just completed a study of fish screens used in other states.

Vast increase in San Francisco's foreign trade was revealed in figures issued recently by William B. Hamilton, Collector of Customs. During the first eleven months of last year foreign trade through this port amounted to $363,696,991, compared to $347,818,110 for the same period in 1927. This is an increase of almost $16,000,000. "The year 1928 was the busiest in the history of the San Francisco Custom House," said Hamilton. "The increase in foreign trade is one reflection of the activity." Exports from San Francisco for the first eleven months of last year exceeded those for the entire year of 1927 by more than $3,000,000. The value of the exports for the eleven months was $182,958,197. November exports last year totaled $19,596,365, an increase of $5,000,000 over the corresponding month of 1927. For the same period imports showed a gain of more than $2,000,000.

The New York Academy of Sciences has awarded a prize of $500 to Dr. D. H. Menzel, assistant astronomer of the University of California Lick Observatory, and Dr. B. P. Gerasimovic, professor at the University of Khardow, Russia, for a paper on "Intra-Atomic Energy as an Important Source of Solar and Stellar Energy," it is announced in Berkeley. The two scientists collaborated in their paper wherein they maintained that the principal source of energy in the sun, is the intra-atomic energy, or energy residing in the normal atom; and that this energy is released from the atoms in an enormous output of radiation when the complex atoms reduce to simpler atoms or disintegrated parts of atoms. Students of the subject declare that this source of energy should suffice to maintain the heat radiation from the sun at its present rate for hundreds of millions of years.

San Francisco took first steps recently in a campaign to procure one of the awo recently authorized Federal "narcotic farms" for the Bay Region.

In the appropriation of more than three and a quarter million dollars to be spent by the state on highway improvement Mendocino county will get $222,000 to be allocated as follows: Six miles of work between Heagney's and Red Mountain creek, $110,000; on the McDonald-to-the-Sea highway, $50,000 has been allowed for bridges between Boonville and Flynn creek, and $62,000 for road work between the same points.

Believed to be the first time, in the history of aviation or education, that a college class has been conducted in an airplane, an observation-lecture class was held "up in the air" by Professor A. J. Tiege of the Department of Geology of the University of Southern California from Los Nietos Field, Whittier, Cal., as part of January class work. During the 1½ hour air session, the students noted the typography and formations of the district, which the same class had previously tried to cover in ten walking field trips.

The Board of Supervisors, adopting a resolution offered by Warren Shannon, requested President Coolidge to give this district favorable consideration in selection of sites for the proposed institutions. The "narcotics farms," where addicts may be cured of their affliction, were created by the Porter bill, signed by the President.

A reduction of 50 cents per barrel in the base price of 14 degree gravity oil at fields of the Standard Oil company in the San Joaquin valley has gone into effect. A reduction of 70 cents a barrel was made on the same oil in the southern California fields. Refinable crudes of the 24 degree gravity and above were not affected.

Stockholders of the Boeing Airplane and Transport Corporation of Seattle have voted to increase the authorized cumulative preferred stock to 1,000,000 shares and the common stock to 2,500,000 shares. The corporate title will be changed to the United Aircraft and Transport Corporation.

Immediately upon the sale of the $20,000 municipal water bonds to the Bank of Martinez, highest of three bidders, the city council awarded contract to Lilly, Willard & Beasotti of Stockton for the raising of the dam at the city reservoir to increase the water storage. The Stockton firm's bid of $6,256.60 was the lowest of several submitted. The dam will be raised at once, the higher earth embankment increasing the storage to a point where the acute water shortage which occurred last fall will not be repeated through the swelling of the volume of stored water during the low-salinity period.

The United States Mint in San Francisco, closed to visitors during the war, may be reopened to the public. The Treasury Department in Washington has directed the supervising architect to make an investigation and survey and report if structural arrangements and changes can be made to provide for visitors. Director of the Mint R. J. Grant informed Congressman Richard J. Welch that if it is found that a gallery can be constructed about the main work rooms of the Mint building at a reasonable expense, he will recommend the work be done. When completed he will then order the mint opened to visitors. The San Francisco Mint was closed "indefinitely" to visitors during the war. It had been a favorite place for sightseers, to whom the minting of the vast sums of gold coin was always most fascinating.

At Santa Rosa recently six persons were shaken but escaped injury when a giant Maddux tri-motored cabin monoplane ran off the runway. The fusilage of the plane was badly cracked. The big Ford plane, in charge of Pilot Marino Guglielmetti, had been sent up from San Francisco to increase interest in the newly opened Santa Rosa airport. The plane was landing after her second takeoff with five Santa Rosans as passengers. Getting into the rain-sodden earth at the end of the runway the wheels of the heavy machine sank into the ground, causing the tail to tip up. It settled with a bump that cracked the fusilage.

Spectographic observations of the planet Neptune, made at the Lick Observatory of the University of California, have settled definitely that this planet is rotating on its axis in the same direction as the earth, according to the annual report of President W. W. Campbell to Governor Young, just published. Through use of the spectroscope and the application of a law determined by Doppler, a German physicist, Astronomer J. H. Moore and Assistant Astronomer D. H. Menzel at Lick Observatory have definitely settled the question. The task was difficult, it is explained, because of the fact that Neptune, approximately 2,707,000,000 miles from the earth at its closest approach, is so far away its disk is scarcely discernible even in the largest refracting telescopes. A probable rotation period of about fifteen hours was also determined.

There has been no maintenance dredging on the Petaluma river for several years. It was their hopes that the amount of money usually used for this purpose could have been had towards the $185,000 that was asked for improvements, which is included in the present river and harbors bills. By so doing it would have created a larger amount of money and naturally would have been of greater assistance for greater development along the river, but due to the attitude of President Coolidge regarding the river and harbors projects, senatorial and congressional bodies decided not to present the bill until after the Coolidge administration.

H. C. Scrutton, chairman, and H. J. Beidleman, secretary, of the river and harbor committee of the Petaluma Chamber of Commerce, were in conferennce in San Francisco recently with Major E. H. Ropes, division engineer of the war department, relative to interests on Petaluma river. They came back with the report that within a short time representatives of the war department will be along the river making preliminary survey for the purpose of making preparations for dredging. It is expected that the dredging will be started early in the spring, as there are places in the river that are very much in need of same.

The reconstructed bridge across the Colorado River at Blythe will be reopened soon, according to John Lyle Harrington, head of the operating corporation. The work, added to by the ravages of flood, has cost $350,000. Belief is expressed that protection afforded the bases of the new piers will prevent river scouring in the future. As many as 120 men have been employed for months past on the work of repair and reinstallation. The Blythe route is materially shorter between Los Angeles and Phoenix than any other now in use and is expected to be a popular one for auto travel.

The initial step toward the creation of a municipality which will ultimately include San Anselmo, Hawthorne Hills, Emporium, Fairfax and Manor was taken recently when at a special meeting of the San Anselmo council, petitions were presented to the council asking the annexation of the Hawthorne Hills and Emporium to the town of San Anselmo. Later an informal conference was held by members of the council and residents of Fairfax, during which time the councilmen were questioned as to their attitude toward the consolidation of San Anselmo and Fairfax.

Ethel Lackie Retires From Swimming World

Miss Ethel Lackie, veteran of the nation's ranking girl swimmers, has retired from amateur competition.

Following the example of Johnnie Weissmuller, Miss Lackie has decided to forsake the amateurs for more lucrative occupations. Together with Weissmuller, Miss Lackie, who holds six world's sprint swimming records, made her final amateur appearance at the Cook County Interscholastic Swimming championship meet. Like Weissmuller, Miss Lackie felt that she had been in competition a long time and swimming for "glory only" was beginning to lose some of its thrill.

She began her series of sensational swimming performances five years ago as a member of the Illinois Athletic club. When that organization disbanded its women's teams she continued her record-breaking performances under the colors of the Illinois Women's Athletic club.

She holds the United States indoor championship at 100 yards, and in 1924 won the 100-meter championship at the Olympic games, returning to this country to win the 100-yard outdoor title.

Horton Smith Is Newest Sensation in Golfdom

Horton Smith of Joplin, Mo., twenty years old, the newest sensation in golf circles, won the Catalina open title by defeating Walter Hagen, British open champ, one up in 72 hole final. Smith's four rounds totaled 245, the 18 hole scores being 63-58-61-63. Smith will compete in many of the southern tournaments during the present season.

Ban Johnson Is Opposed to Heydler's Ten-Man Plan

Ban Johnson, retired president of the American league, is opposed to John Heydler's plan for ten-man baseball teams.

"The ten-man team idea does not appeal to me at all," he said. "It destroys the original thought in baseball of a team of nine men, and of each man being an athlete and a ball player who bats and runs and throws.

"I would suggest that instead of a ten-man team a rule be provided limiting the manager in the number of substitutes he may use," he said.

Johnson expressed opposition to the "chain store" or "farm" system, whereby major league clubs own and operate minor league teams, declaring that the system "is detrimental to the best interests of the game."

Tia Juana's Futurity Is Attracting Youngsters

The cream of the nation's two-year-old crop, present yearlings, will vie in the $7,500 added Tia Juana futurity, to be run March 31, according to the list of nominations made public by Jockey club officials. One hundred and eight of the best bred yearlings in the country have been named.

The Tia Juana futurity is the West's greatest stake for two-year-olds. It is at five furlongs, a true test for the youngsters in the spring of the year. Owners of the crack youngsters have been exceedingly liberal in their nominations. It was particularly gratifying to westerners to see so many California and Nevada breeding establishments name their best get for this rich stake.

Football Safest

It's safer to play football than to sit in a chair, or even to lie in your bed, according to figures compiled by Coroner Herman N. Bundesen of Chicago.

Only one death was caused by football in Chicago in 1928, his records reveal, whereas seven persons died after falling from their chairs. Three fell out of bed and succumbed to their injuries.

During the year 340 persons were killed in Chicago by falls.

HOPPE RETURNS TO BALK LINE

Asserts He Is Not Through With Billiards.

Willie Hoppe, the boy wonder of other days, is ready to forsake his dream of winning a three-cushion billiard title and will once again take up balk line—the game at which he won international fame as 15 times national champion in 17 years.

Hoppe, whose name is synonymous with billiards, deserted the 18.2 ranks a year ago in quest of a championship at the angle game. His playing was the sensation of the American Three-Cushion Billiard league, but on each of two attempts to acquire a national or world title he found Johnny Layton, the Missouri fisherman and carpenter, barring his path.

Although he has seen his supremacy in the balk-line game pass to another, and failed in his quest of a three-cushion crown, Hoppe declares he is not through.

"I am only forty-one years old and have plenty of good billards left in my system," said Hoppe after Layton crushed all hopes Hoppe had of acquiring the only major billiard title he has never held by defeating him in the tournament at Chicago.

"The game is a lot tougher than when I won my first 18.2 championship in 1910," said Hoppe. "Especially is this true in the three-cushion game, where any one of the four players competing in the world tournament is of championship caliber."

Hoppe held the 18.2 balk-line title continuously from 1910 to 1920, but the next year young Jake Schaefer broke the reign of the master of the masse shot. Hoppe regained his lost laurels in 1923, and this time held the title for three years before dropping it to Welker Cochran in 1925. He regained it again for a short time in 1926, but finished far down the list at the Washington (D. C.) tournament the year following.

"Three-cushion has not ruined my stroke for balk line," said Hoppe. "With a few weeks' practice I will be back again fighting as hard as ever to win in the game which I know best."

Hoppe has always contended balk line is the most difficult type of billiards, and points to the fact that few younger players are taking up the game.

"It is too difficult for most of the players," said Hoppe. "The United States will have to begin to look to its laurels in a few years when the present crop of cue artists drop out."

Knute Rockne Scores 92 Victories During Career

Since Knute Rockne became football coach in 1917, Notre Dame has played 111 games, winning 92, and losing 13 and tying six, the athletic department has revealed in the football annual just released.

The record shows that 1928, when the Ramblers lost four games out of nine, was the poorest during Rockne's coachship. Yet, Rockne classed the team as one of the gamest he ever coached.

Of all the teams Notre Dame has met, in the Rockne regime, Nebraska has been the hardest to defeat, the records show. Of nine games with the Cornhuskers, Notre Dame has won four, lost three and tied two; against the army the Ramblers have won eight, lost two and tied one.

Despite this great record, Notre Dame has had but three seasons in that period in which it came through its hard campaign without being defeated or tied. In 1919 and 1920, the Ramblers won nine without a defeat or tie and in 1924, they hung up ten straight victories.

Play Old Teacher

Three former pupils of Coach Amos Alonzo Stagg will bring teams to Stagg field next fall in an attempt to teach their old teacher a football lesson. Beloit college, coached by Campbell Dickson; Indiana State college, coached by Wallie Marks and Indiana university, coached by Pat Page, are on Chicago's home schedule. All are former Chicago stars and pupils of Stagg. The 1928 schedule calls for games with Purdue, Princeton, Wisconsin, Illinois and the University of Washington.

Layton Sets Records

When Johnny Layton won the first world three-cushion billiard title, defeating Willie Hoppe, 50 to 23, he established two records.

The stocky Missourian, who is as much at home aiming a gun as a billiard cue, ran the block in 24 innings—the shortest game ever played. To hang up the other record he averaged 1 13-50 billiards an inning in the three games he won.

"It was the best series of games I ever played," said Layton.

POULTRY

EARLY BIRD GETS RICH EGG RATION

February Chicks Should Make Rapid Growth.

Leghorn chicks hatched in February should be fed rations that make for continual rapid growth, is the advice offered by the poultry department of the New Jersey Agricultural college.

Pullets from early hatched chicks cannot be expected to produce a profitable number of eggs during the summer and fall, if their growth is stunted in any manner. Any good baby chick ration will prove satisfactory until the birds are eight or ten weeks old. After that date, the specialists advise that they be placed upon a ration similar to a good laying ration, but containing a larger amount of minerals. To have the bird come into production as soon as possible and at the same time have her continue her body growth is the poultryman's aim.

No matter how they are fed, February hatched birds can always be expected to go through a moult in the late fall. They can use this period for any increase in weight or growth that has not been accomplished previously.

One must remember that an early hatched bird is an entirely different individual from a late hatched bird. The later hatches should have a much slower development in order to prevent an early winter moult, but with the early hatched stock the aim is to get all of the eggs possible before the early winter moult.

Feed Turkey Breeders for Vigorous Poults

Too much corn in the turkey's winter ration may make the birds too fat for the production of eggs of high hatchability. Some breeders feed 3 parts of oats to 1 of corn and find that the stock come through the winter in condition to produce vigorous poults. Equal parts of corn, wheat and oats make a good grain ration for turkey breeding stock. The addition of cull vegetables, and alfalfa or clover is necessary until the turkeys can forage in the spring.

Before the turkey hens begin to lay, it often pays to give them a hopper of the same balanced laying mash which is used for the chickens. Where they have had nothing but grain they may be reluctant to eat the mash but if it is kept before them, some of the mash will probably be eaten and it will help to improve egg production and keep up the vigor of the turkey hens while they are laying. Keep a hopper of oyster shells before the turkey hens to help in producing firm shells on the eggs and reduce breakage in the nests.

Feeding the turkey breeding stock on soil away from the chickens is a help in preventing blackhead and other turkey diseases. Diseases are often spread through the medium of the droppings which have contaminated the feed. Some losses may be prevented by feeding both the grain and the mash in hoppers so that none of the feed will touch soil which might be contaminated with disease.

Poultry Notes

It pays to rid hens of worms.

One water fountain is needed to each 25 chicks.

A hot, stuffy brooder house is as undesirable for chicks as it is for the attendant.

Cod liver oil isn't just a fad. It helps to remedy the lack of sunshine and green feed at this time of year.

If there were losses from bacillary white diarrhea last year it is not safe to use infertile eggs for the young poultry this spring unless the eggs are so well cooked or baked that all bacilli are destroyed.

Warm water is fine for hens in cold weather. A safely-heated water fountain will return several times its cost in eggs.

If the litter gets damp in a short time it means poor ventilation—and then there's danger of roup. A straw loft overhead will help.

It pays to study your flock and make the birds like you. Doubters may laugh, but hens will lay better for a caretaker that they know well and are glad to see.

It is not considered good practice to take breeding cockerels from the same brood from which you get your pullets.

It is said that if alfalfa hay is used for hens' nests and scattered around the chicken coops the chicken mites will beat a hasty retreat.

Protein derived from animal sources, such as meat products and milk, is of greater value to the hen than protein from vegetable feeds, such as cottonseed and linseed.

No part of the ration for chickens is more vital than certain minerals. The chicken has a very high mineral requirement as compared to most other species of animals and disaster is sure to follow if adequate minerals are not provided.

The standard weight for matured toms of the Bronze turkey variety is 36 pounds and for the hens 20 pounds. An early hatched tom should weigh 25 pounds in the fall and a hen that will reach 20 pounds when mature should weigh 15 pounds.

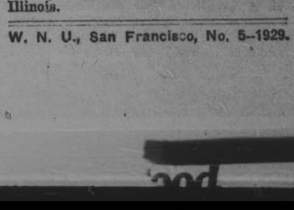
Cough and Croup Remedy

Water Carrier

An Indianapolis father was quizzing his ten-year-old son about his history and thinking to trip him up he said: "Well, Bob, I bet you don't know who Molly Pitcher was." Without any hesitation he said: "She was the one that carried water to the soldiers."



DR. CALDWELL'S THREE RULES

Dr. Caldwell watched the results of constipation for 47 years, and believed that no matter how careful people are of their health, diet and exercise, constipation will occur from time to time. Of next importance, then, is how to treat it when it comes. Dr. Caldwell always was in favor of getting as close to nature as possible, hence his remedy for constipation is a mild vegetable compound. It can not harm the most delicate system and is not habit forming.

The Doctor never did approve of drastic physics and purges. He did not believe they were good for human beings to put into their system. Use Syrup Pepsin for yourself and members of the family in constipation, biliousness, sour and crampy stomach, bad breath, no appetite, headaches, and to break up fevers and colds. Get a bottle today, at any drugstore and observe these three rules of health: Keep the head cool, the feet warm, the bowels open. For a free trial bottle, just write "Syrup Pepsin," Dept. BB, Monticello, Illinois.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 1, 1929.

Dr. Ray Lyman Wilbur

IT is conceded in political circles that Ray Lyman Wilbur, the able president of Stanford University, will be chosen by Herbert Hoover, president-elect, to be secretary of the interior in the new cabinet. This is a very important portfolio, one that will have to do with the construction of the Boulder Dam, the conservation of the oil lands and the caring for of the forests and the establishing of new reclamation districts throughout the west.

Dr. Wilbur is one of the outstanding figures of the country, admired for his learning and general grasp of affairs. As a physician he ranks high in his profession. Not only is he learned and able but he is honest and trustworthy, just the one man to capably and efficiently fill the position to which he will be assigned by his friend, Herbert Hoover.

Mr. Hoover and Dr. Wilbur have been friends since school days at Stanford, where both were compelled to work their way through that institution. The president-elect has a great admiration for his friend. He knows his ability, his honesty and integrity and he wants him to be by his side in the great work before him in giving the people an efficient and economic administration. With such men as Wilbur as his advisers, Mr. Hoover may be assured and the country may be encouraged that the new administration will be successful and popular and the country will prosper and progress in a way that it has never done before.

Mr. Hoover has shown wisdom in the selection of Dr. Wilbur for the Interior Portfolio. This selection means that the politicians will have little to say regarding the choosing of his advisers. He is not to be influenced by them in this important work. Mr. Hoover's independence is already manifest. He will do his own thinking and will gather about him the ablest minds of the country in carrying out his pledges to the people.

The Peninsula is thrice honored in the appointment of Dr. Wilbur. It is the home of the president-elect, the dwelling place of the next secretary of the interior, and the abode of California's distinguished senator, Samuel M. Shortridge. Perhaps no other locality in the United States has enjoyed such a distinction.

These men honor their community, their state and the nation. We are all proud of them.

A Municipal Need

SPEAKING before a group of business men of this city Tuesday evening, an official of the Western Air Express emphasized a need long felt by many residents of this city—the need of a properly lighted and charted airport. This is a need, it is true, more of the future than of the present, but if a community awaits the time that its need becomes imperative, it may find that land values have advanced to such an extent that the cost of a proper field may be prohibitive.

In the near future the people of Redwood City will vote upon the purchase of a tract of land for the purpose of developing a municipal wharf and waterfront. This tract will afford ample space for an airport and would be most advantageous for aquatic planes as well as for those landing on the land. The acquisition of such a tract will be of great benefit to Redwood City and will afford a double means of transportation. With the development of the aeroplane in the future such a tract and landing field will be the town's most valued. asset.

The airport of today is no longer a stunt field or a place of amusement, it is becoming a necessity to transportation, and the day is not far distant when it will be as essential as a railroad depot. The public is fast becoming "air-minded," as the increase of air transport business testifies, and no state in the Union is as "air-minded" as is California.

An Eloquent Address

THE Congressional Record contains the speech made recently by Senator Samuel M. Shortridge in favor of ratifying the Multilateral Treaty which was ratified by a vote of eighty to one.

The address was one of the ablest heard in the senate this session. At its conclusion, Senator Reed, the Old Man Eloquent of Missouri, who is retiring from that body after a long and able career, congratulated the senator from California for his clear and concise explanation of his position on the treaty.

Baline of Wisconsin continually interrupted the senator in his discourse. Blaine is one of the radical members of the upper house and he was the only senator who voted against the treaty. Among other things the senator said:

"I have not by any means admitted that there is any necessity to go outside of the treaty as written; but to pursue that thought for just a moment, and then to recur to the line of argument that I desire to follow, if it be permissible to go outside the four corners of this treaty, we may go outside of it; and when I come to that point I shall maintain, as I do immediately now, that we may go outside of it for the purpose of holding, should the question ever arise, that the Monroe doctrine is in our minds, and that we have not by any means renounced it or agreed that it shall not be invoked should we think it threatened.

I was about to say that I assume that Senators are familiar with these general rules for the interpretation of written contracts, and hence that it is not necessary to cite authorities to sustain them. But it has been suggested that treaties are to be given "liberal interpretations," and by that suggestion it appears to be thought that it is permissible to read into a treaty moral and legal obligations concerning which the minds of the signatory powers never met; in a word, to add to or take from the obligations of the treaty as expressed by plain unambiguous, and intelligible written words or language.

Misled by this erroneous notion, it seems to be feared that by entering into this proposed agreement, this treaty, we shall be held or bound to do, or to refrain from doing something not specifically set out in the written agreement.

With proper respect, I repeat myself when I say that to entertain such a notion, or to be misled by such a fear, is utterly without authority or foundation. But lest my statement, more or less dogmatic, be considered unsupported, it may be well to cite a few of the authoritative cases, wherein the true and universally recognized rule for interpreting treaties is stated, and stated so plainly that I think, we can all understand.

In the case of the United States vs. Arrendondo (6 Peters, 689) the Supreme Court of the United speaking through Mr. Justice Baldwin, we find the following language:

The laws under which we now adjudicate on the rights embraced in the treaty and its instructions authorize and direct us to do it judicially and give its judicial meaning and interpretation as a contract, on the principles of justice and the rules of equity.

* * * * * * *

Many of the once small and weak republics of the New World, guarded in their infancy by this doctrine, have become great and strong, and some may not think they further need its protection; but whether or not they need or think they need its protection, we may need its protection and will not hesitate to invoke it.

Mr. President, from what I have said I reached the conclusion that this American doctrine is not impaired or taken away by omission to mention or specifically, in express world reserve it in this treaty. Whether the proposed treaty passed by us or not, if any power violates or threatens that doctrine, we hold ourselves at liberty to resort to such means as may be in our power to assert and defend it.

It has been suggested that by entering into the treaty we obligate ourselves to go to war as an ally or associate with other signatory power or powers that may be in war brought on by violation of the treaty. Sympathy or common interests might cause us to join in such a war, but it is enough to say that there is no such express or implied legal or moral obligation to do so found in the treaty.

Senator Shortridge closed his masterly address in the following language:

Let us have faith; let us join gladly and unreservedly in laying—a new and living stone in the grand temple of universal peace, whose dome shall be lofty as the firmament of heaven, broad and comprhensive as earth itself.

And if as we fondly hope this nobly conceived treaty, this condemnation of war for the solution of international controversies, this renunciation of war as an instrument of national policy, shall be sacredly observed then, Mr. President, for a second time the morning stars shall sing together and all the sons of God shout joyous praise.

That Flock of Bills

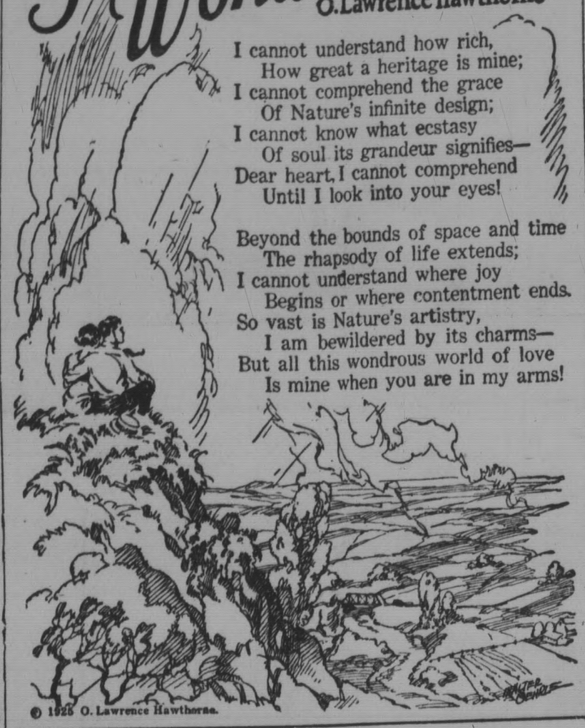
OUR law-making machinery for both State and Federal governments is well oiled up. If all the measures proposed during 1929, were passed, one could not turn around without breaking a law and enforcement would be impossible.

As it is, insurance, banking, public utilities and railroads—the backbone of our industrial structure—will be unreasonably harassed. Numerous measures will be proposed to increase the taxes on business or restrict it in its field of operation.

In the meantime, the managers of business will have to maintain payrolls, keep up production, pay the bulk of the taxes to support government and find new capital to make needed improvements to care for the demands of the public.

Then the World is Mine!

By O. Lawrence Hawthorne



I cannot understand how rich,
How great a heritage is mine;
I cannot comprehend the grace
Of Nature's infinite design;
I cannot know what ecstasy
Of soul its grandeur signifies—
Dear heart, I cannot comprehend
Until I look into your eyes!

Beyond the bounds of space and time
The rhapsody of life extends;
I cannot understand where joy
Begins or where contentment ends.
So vast is Nature's artistry,
I am bewildered by its charms—
But all this wondrous world of love
Is mine when you are in my arms!

REDWOOD MAN RACE WINNER

E. Borden Leads Bulletin Sprint

Eddie Borden, resident of Emerald Lake, took first place in the Bulletin's cross-city race held in San Francisco Sunday. His time, from the Ferry building, to the foot of the Cliff House hill, a distance of 7 1-2 miles was 45 minutes and 5 seconds. Borden was the first unattached man to enter the race, and was one of 74 who started at the crack of Chief of Police Quinn's gun.

Borden did his training for the sprint on the roads surrounding Emerald lake. In about ten days he expects to leave for New York to enter the C. C. Pyle cross-country race from New York to Los Angeles.

Bank of Italy Forms Giant Corporation

Transamerica Corporation, the new billion dollar organization created to acquire ownership of the Bank of Italy and related companies, has announced a plan that will permit the purchase of its stock on a monthly payment basis, at $130 per share.

The proposal limits the number of shares that may be purchased by one person, to 25, and provides for an initial payment of $10 per share, with subsequent monthly instalments of $5 per share for 24 months. Purchasers are not permitted to pay in advance, nor will the stock be delivered until the expiration of the two year purchase period.

No interest will be charged on the deferred balances but the dividends will not be paid to the instalment purchasers until the termination of the contract. Stock dividends, should any be declared, will however, accrue to the benefit of the purchaser. The price at which the stock is being offered is slightly below the current market quotation.

The shares being offered represent the holdings of Bancitaly Corporation in Bank of Italy, the stock having been exchanged for that of Transamerica.

Fish Screen Cost Cause of Battle In Legislature

—Gatehring forces for a new attack on the battle-scarred statute imposing cost of building fish screens at irrigation water intakes agricultural forces today are massing solidly behind the proposal of Assemblyman Robert P. Easley of Antioch to place such costs directly on the fish and game commission.

Holding that legislation now imposing the cost directly upon agricultural interests is unfair, and strictly in the interests of city sportsmen, Easley would permit the commission to install screens at its own option, and would charge it with regular inspection service to see that such barriers were in proper working order.

The commission, which will fight for retention of the present law, now is engaged in an inspection of all irrigation system intakes to discover the extent to which the statute is obeyed.

The Gorgas Idea
Better Health Longer Life
GORGAS MEMORIAL INSTITUTE

Do I Cause My Child To Be Nervous

By Lawson G. Lowrey, M. D., New York City

(This series of articles is prepared under the direction of the Gorgas Memorial Institute, which is organized to perpetuate the life work of the late Major General Gorgas in preventing unnecessary illness. Headquarters of the Institute are at 1331 G Street, N. W., Washington, D. C.)

From early infancy some children are "nervous." They are fusy, irritable babies; delicate, sensitive, easily upset children; they become easily flustered, excitable adults.

Most "nervous" children are, however, the product of the management given them. Their parents act in some or all of the ways listed above. Nervous parents expect, and so cause, nervous children. They constantly remind the child of this. In their own nervousness they set an example, and it is usually imitated. They communicate their worries to the child, who increases them many fold. They cannot permit the child to lead a life of his own, and either push him to the extreme limit, or do all the thinking for him.

Cultivate calmness. Do not fuss at the child. Give him peace; an oportunity to do things and learn for himself. Use your common sense; recall your own childhood; be patient and kind. Settle your worries in some other way than by passing them on to the child. Know your child; his interests and capacities; his weaknesses and strong points. Above all, be yourself as calm and peaceful as you can. If you have any of the habits or attitudes listed above, change them.

Do I cause my child to be nervous? By being nervous myself? Telling him about it so I may have his sympathy? Constantly reminding him how nervous he is? Telling other people in his presence how nervous and queer and odd he is? Worrying over his health and habits? Worrying him with my worries over him? Coddling him physically and mentally? Denying him independence of thought and action? Expecting too much from him and driving him all the time?

If you think your child is nervous, first be sure of yourself.

Vehicles Total 21,146

TO, Jan. 30 — Re- eneral prosperity that California during the the Division of Mo- oday made public a a net gain of 122,- registrations of mo- 1928 over the preegistrations, inclusive ars, solid and pneu- cks, motorcycles and nted to 1,859,432 as compared with 1,736,765 for 1927, or an approximate gain of 7 percent

This total does not take into consideration the 27,109 automobiles, 448 motorcyles and 2,963 trailers that were registered but were exempt by law from payment of the license fee nor the 83,506 non-resident cars that came into the state during the year.

The fee-paid registrations for the year were divided as follows: Automobiles, 1,591,739; solid trucks, 36,618 pneumatic trucks, 184,450; motorcycles, 9,455; trailers, 37,170.

The net gain in passenger cars alone for the year was 112,328. There was a slight drop in the number of solid-tired trucks registered but motorcycles which have been losing consistently for several years, showed a slight increase.

Motor vehicle officials explained that the registration by county is the basis used in apportioning each county its share of the registration fees to be used for road purposes.

Although the totals have not been completely checked there are indications that the Division's total receipts will be near $9,000,000 for the year. Mots of this money will be apportioned to the counties and the state highway commission for highway maintenance and repair.

The record by county shows Los Angeles registered 745,929 vehicles during the year or more than one-third of all registrations in the entire state. San Francisco was second and Alameda, third.

San Mateo county registered a total of 21,146 vehicles consisting of 18,074 passenger cars, 626 solid trucks; 2,102 pneumatic trucks; 124 motorcycles and 220 trailers.

JAILED FOR VAGRANCY

Fred Nauman, arrested by Redwood City police for vagrancy, was sentenced on Monday to ten days in the county jail by City Judge Albert Mansfield.

WOODSIDE

We had quite a taste of real winter last week with the summits of the hills around us covered with snow and ice on the rain-water pools in the back yard. Most of us were anxious for a closer inspection of that white powder that made Black Mountain look like a frosted fruit cake. La Honda and Alpine grades were crowded with automobiles that skidded gloriously on the icy surface and giant snowballs were rolled and strenuous snow battles waged during the few days that the snow lasted. Having had experience I can assert that the snow is more apreciated when it lasts afew days than when it persists for several months.

The Bear Gulch Water Company, having found their present facilities inadequate to the increasing demand for water in this section are surveying the mountain side to discover a site for another and larger storage reservoir. An increased supply of water would prove a valuable asset to Woodside.

George Whittell makes frequent aerial inspections of his property here but because of the lack of a landing field he is obliged to stay up in the air. He is planning, however, the construction of a landing field upon his own property. It will not be many years before the necessity of a public field will make itself apparent.

Mrs. Selah Chamberlain and Miss Edith Chamberlain are at present where they expect to be joined later in the season by the other members of the family.

The many friends of Nels Andreen will rejoice to hear that after many weeks of confinement to his house he is now able to be about once more.

The Parent-Teacher Association is plannnig a Valentine's Day party for the children of the school to be followed by a party for themselves.

Mrs. Fred H. Mighalls, Mrs. O. E. Blackington and Mrs. John D. Gish of Woodside and Mrs. Mervyn McArthur of Redwood City were entertained at luncheon on Thursday by Mrs. Henry McArthur at her home in Palo Alto.

County Government Affected by Bills In Legislature

By ESTO BROUGHTON

SACRAMENTO, Jan. 31—(CNB) —Forging into greater prominence during the legislative recess, due to numerous conferences between county officials and their respective lawmakers, the issue of "home rule" for San Mateo county and other sections of the state today promises to become a major problem when the state legislature reconvenes here Feb. 18.

There are two county self-determination bills awaiting consideration, one sponsored by Assemblyman Frank W. Luttrell of Santa Rosa and the second by Assemblyman Charles H. Deuel of Chico.

Luttrell's proposal is to investigate the best methods of restoring "home rule." The bill calls for appointment of a commission to make a thorough inquiry into the problem and report back at the 1931 session on plans for re-delegating back to the counties the right to regulate both the number and pay of their officials.

Deuel's measure is a constitutional amendment, authorizing the supervisor's to fix the salaries of county officers, determine the number and compensation of deputies and pass on other matters of local concern. This would obviate the biennial flood of "county government acts" in the Legislature, which are passed with most of the legislators ignorant of what they contain and sometimes with the local delegation cloudy as to their exact provisions. At present the legislative representatives of a county generally accept the recommendations of the county grand jury without question, it is claimed.

Municipal and county governments are affected by nearly a score of other measures pending before the Legislature, these including the following:

1. Cleveland's act, requiring a taxpayer election in all special district bond elections, such as irrigation districts, improvement districts, etc.

2. Lyons-Pedrotti act to authorize pension system for county and township officers and employes.

3. Allen bill, allowing high school trustees to pay board and lodging of pupils in lieu of transportation.

4. Wright measure, allowing boards of supervisors to purchase park sites in another county.

5. McKinley bill, empowering boards of supervisors in all counties to appropriate money from the general county fund for the benefit of the national guard units in the county.

6. American Legion proposal, urging all cities and counties to adopt state civil service regulations giving preferential rights to ex-service men.

7. Coombs bill, authorizing the creation by the board of supervisors of a county board of mental health, to be composed of the county health officer and two other members.

8. Crowley act, allowing boards of supervisors to levy a tax for pensioning the needly blind.

9. Cleveland - Synder act to authorize municipalities to acquire public utilities.

10. Merriam measure, requiring cities and counties to insure their officers and employes against public liability in the course of their employment.

11. Jost bill providing for the creation of police relief, life insurance and pension funds in cities of the fifth and sixth class.

12. Bernard bill, enlarging powers of boards of supervisors in constructing bridges without advertising for bids.

13. Arnold act, limiting city and county debts to 50 per cent of the true value of the land.

14. Reindollar act, authorizing counties to establish airports.

15. Anderson bill, establishing office of county engineer for all counties.

Chapter III

The steps by which Halliday solved the murder of the main house, and with it the mystery which had preceded it, constitute an interesting story in themselves. So certain was he that, by the time we were ready for the third seance, his material was already in the hands of the district attorney. And it was not the material he had given to Greenough.

For the solution of a portion of the mystery, then, one must go back to the main house, and consider the older part of it. It is well known that many houses of that period were provided with hidden passages, by which the owners hoped to escape the excise. Such an attempt, many years ago, had cost George Pierce his life.

But the passage leading from the old kitchen, now the den, to a closet in the room above it, had been blocked up for many years. The builder was dead; by all the laws of chance time might have gone on and the passage remained undiscovered.

In 1890, however, Eugenia Riggs bought the property, and in making repairs the old passage was discovered. Although she denied using it for fraudulent purposes, neither Halliday nor I doubt that she did so. She points to the plastered wall as her defense, but Halliday assures me that a portion of the baseboard, hinged to swing out, but locked from within, would have allowed easy access to the cabinet.

But Halliday had at the beginning no knowledge of this passage, with its ladder to the upper floor. He reached it by pure deduction.

"It had to be there," he says modestly. "And it was." . . .

Up to the time young Gordon was attacked at the kitchen door, however, Halliday was frankly at sea. That is, he had certain suspicions, but that was all. He had discovered, for instance, that the cipher found in my garage was written on the same sort of bond paper as that used by Gordon, by the simple expedient of having Annie Cochran get him a sheet of it, on some excuse or other.

But his actual case began, I believe, with that attack on Gordon. At least he began at that time definitely to associate the criminal with the house.

"There was something fishy about it," is the way he puts it.

And with Bethel's story to me, forced by his fear that the boy knew it was he who had attacked him, the belief that it was "fishy" gained ground.

"Gordon was knocked out," he says. "And that ought to have been enough. But it was not. He was tied, too, tied while he was still unconscious. Somebody wasn't taking a chance that he'd get back into the house very soon."

It was that "play for time," as he terms it, that made him suspicious.

All this time, of course, he was ignorant of any underlying motive; he makes it clear that he simply began, first to associate the crimes with the house, and then with Bethel. He kept going back to his copy of the unfinished letter, but:

"It didn't help much," he says quietly. "Only, there was murder indicated in it. And we were having murder."

He had three clews, two of them certain, one doubtful. The certain ones were the linen from the oarlock of the boat, torn from a sheet belonging to the main house, and the small portion of the cipher. The one he was not certain about was the lens from an eyeglass, outside the culvert.

He began to watch the house; he "didn't get" Gordon in the situation at all; there was no situation there really; nothing, that is, that he could lay his hand on. But on the night I called him and he started toward Robinson's point, as he came back toward the house he saw the figure of a man certainly not Gordon, enter the house by the gunroom window. When he got there the window was closed and locked.

He was puzzled. He looked around for me, but I was not in sight. Still searching for me, he made a round of the house, and so was on the terrace when I fired the shot. From that time on he saw Bethel somehow connected with the mystery, but only as the brains.

"There was some devil's work afoot," he said. "But always I came up against that paralysis of his. He had to have outside help."

On the night in question, then, he was certain that this accomplice was still in the house through all that followed; through Hayward's arrival and Starr's. He was so certain by that time of Gordon's innocence that he very nearly took him into his confidence the next day. But he was afraid of the boy; he was not dependable; Halliday had an idea that "he was playing his own game."

But if this man was in the house that night, where was he?

He grew suspicious of the den, after that, and he found out through Starr the name of the builder who had put in the paneling in the den, for Uncle Horace. It was a long story, but in the end he learned something.

Tearing the old baseboard prior to putting up the panels, the builder had happened on the old passage to the room overhead, and he had called Horace Porter's attention to it. It seems to have appealed to the poor old chap; it belonged, somehow, to the room with the antique stuff he was putting into it. He built in a sliding panel; it was not a particularly skilful piece of work, but it answered. And he kept his secret, at least from me.

I doubt if he ever used it, until prohibition came in. Then, no drinker himself, he put there a small and choice supply of liquor, some of which we found later on. And one bottle of which placed Halliday in peril of his life, a day or so after the night I had fired the shot into the hall.

He had borrowed Annie Cochran's key to the kitchen door, and after midnight entered the house and went to the den. Although he is reticent about this portion of it, I gather that the house was not all it should be that night.

"You know the sort of thing," he says.

But, pressed as to that, he admits that he was hearing small and inexplicable sounds from the library. Chairs seemed to move, and once he was certain that the curtain to the doorway behind him blew out into the room. When he looked back over his shoulder, however, it was hanging as before.

He had no trouble in finding the panel, and as carefully as he could he stepped inside. But he had touched one of the bottles and it fell over.

"It didn't make much noise," he says, "but it was enough. He was awake, and paralysis or no paralysis, I hadn't time to move before he was in the closet overhead, and opening the trap in the floor."

He had not had time to move, and even if he had, there were the infernal bottles all around him. So he stood without breathing, waiting for he knew not what.

"Things looked pretty poor," he says. "I didn't know when he'd strike a match and see me. And it was good-night if he did!"

But Bethel had no match, evidently. He stood listening intently, and in the darkness below Halliday held his breath and waited. Then Bethel moved. He left the trap door above open and went for a light, and Halliday crawled out and closed the panel quietly.

From that time on, however, he knew Bethel was no more helpless than he was. He abandoned the idea of an accomplice, and concentrated on the man himself. . . .

Annie Cochran was working with him; that is, she did what he asked her, although she seems not to have known at any time the direction in which he was working. Her own mind was already made up; she believed Gordon to be guilty. She made no protest, however, when he asked her to break Mr. Bethel's spectacles one early morning, and give him the fragments. But she did it, pretending afterward that she had thrown the pieces into the stove.

Bethel was watchful and suspicious by that time, and she had a bad time of it, but what is important here is that Halliday took the fragments into the city, and established beyond a doubt that they and the piece of a lens found near the culvert were made from the same prescription.

And he had no more than made his discovery, when Gordon, attempting at last the blackmail which he had been threatening, was put out of the way as quickly and ruthlessly as had been poor Peter Carroway.

"Twenty-four hours," Halliday says bitterly, "and we would have saved him."

But twenty-four hours later Bethel had made good his escape, and everything was apparently over.

But from that time Bethel as Bethel ceased to exist for Halliday.

He was not working alone, however. Very early, he had realized that he needed assistance, real assistance. Annie Cochran's help was always of the below-stairs order. And he found the help he wanted after the night Gordon was attacked, in Hayward. As a matter of fact, it was Hayward who went to him.

"He was worried about you, Skipper," Halliday says, with a grin. "He considered it quite possible that the attempt to wrangle English literature into too many brain corrals might have driven you slightly mad."

On the night, then, when Gordon was hurt, the doctor was impulsively on his way to Halliday and the boathouse.

"He came within an inch of having you locked up that night," says Halliday.

Later on, he did go to Halliday, and Halliday then and there enlisted him in his service. He was not shrewd, but he was willing and earnest, and from that time on he was useful. He had started, presumably, on his vacation but actually on a very different errand, when the murder at the main house occurred, and Halliday recalled him by wire.

But when he returned, it was, at Halliday's request, to hide in the Livingstone house. It was from there that he came, at night, to assist Halliday in guarding the main house.

One perceives, of course, that the Livingstones had been brought into the case. Dragged in, is the way Halliday puts it. But after the first conference between the doctor and himself they were in it, willy nilly.

"Who," Halliday asked Hayward, referring to his copy of my Uncle Horace's letter, "were likely to have access to Horace Porter at night?"

"No one, so far as I know. The Livingstones, possibly."

"Then the man who came in while he was writing this letter might have been Livingstone?"

"He was ill that night. I was with him."

"Then Livingstone's out," said Halliday, and turned in a new direction.

"Some theory, some wickedness, was put up to him. And it horrified and alarmed him. A man doesn't present such a theory without leading up to it. Let's try this: what subject was most interesting Horace Porter during the last years, or months, of his life?"

"Spiritism, I imagine. I know he was working on it."

"Alone? A man doesn't work that sort of thing alone, as a rule."

"I'll ask Mrs. Livingstone, if you like. She may know."

And ask the Livingstones he did, with the result that Halliday got his first real clew, and elaborated the darling theory which culminated in that fatal fall from the ladder, in the secret passage on the tragic night of the 10th of September. . .

All this time, of course, it remained only a theory. Hayward scouted it at first, but came to it later on; the Livingstones offered a more difficult problem.

"They didn't want to be involved," Halliday says. "But after Edith's letter came I more or less had them. And of course after he'd tried to get into the house, and left the print of his hand on the window board, they had to come in. They'd denied any knowledge of the passage before that. But he knew it as well as I did, or better, and that there was a chance old Bethel knew it, too, and had used it."

This letter of Edith's, to which I have already referred, runs as follows:

"Dear Madam:

"I have read your article with great interest, and would like to suggest that a good medium might be very useful under the circumstances.

"You have one of the best in the country in your vicinity. She has retired, and is now living under another name somewhere in the vicinity of Oakville.

"When I knew her she was known as Eugenia Riggs, but this was her maiden name, which she had retained. Her husband's name is Livingstone; I do not know his initials.

"She has abandoned the profession in which she made so great a success, but I understand is still keenly interested."

The letter is not signed. . . .

Halliday did not require that knowledge; he had suspected it before. But it gave him a lever. One attempt had already been made by Bethel to get back into the house. Time was getting short; before long we would have to go back to the city, and although he knew by that time who and what Bethel was, he could prove nothing. To go was to abandon the case.

"They'd Denied Any Knowledge of the Passage Before That."

He could not secure the arrest of a man because his lens prescription was the same as the murderer's. Or on the strength of an unsigned book manuscript left behind the wall of the den. He could not prove that Maggie Morrison had died in the process of the experimen; Gordon had puzzled over, because the mud on the truck wheels corresponded with the red iron-clay of the lane into the main house. He could not prove his own interpretation of the abbreviations S. and G. T. so liberally scattered through the diary. And he could not prove that it was Bethel who, looking for the broken lens in or near the culvert, had found my fountain pen there. A fact which Gordon had noted in the Journal as follows: "I have them now, sure. W. P. was here last night and left his fountain pen."

But he could, through the Livingstones, take a chance on proving all these things. And, against Livingstone's protests and fears, prove it he did.

"As a matter of fact," he says, "they were in a bad position themselves, and they knew it. They had to come over again!" . . .

Things were, indeed, rather parlous for the Livingstones. "As a matter of fact," Halliday says cheerfully, "I gave the police a very pretty case against them. It was all there, according to Greenough. Even to the handprint!"

But he held them off. He had done what he wanted, turned the police along a false trail and was free once more to travel along the true one. And in this he says, and I believe, that his purpose was not mercenary.

"The situation was peculiar," he says. "The slightest slip, the faintest suspicion, and he was off."

And he goes back again to the subtlety and wariness of the criminal himself; so watchful, so wary, that throughout it had even been necessary to keep me in ignorance.

"You had to carry on, Skipper," he says. "In a way, the whole thing hung on you. Even then, you nearly wrecked us once."

Which was, he tells me the night of the second seance, when the criminal actually fell into the trap and entered the house. Livingstone was on guard upstairs that night, and everything would have ended then probably.

"But you spilled the beans!" he accuses me.

From the first the seances were devised for a purpose, and I gather that some of the phenomena were deliberately faked, in pursuit of that purpose. On the other hand, Mrs. Livingstone has always been firm in her statement that "things happened" which she cannot explain. The sounds in the library, the lights and the arrival of the book on the table are among them.

But trickery or genuine psychic manifestations, in the end they served their purpose. I called the third seance, and the mystery was solved. . .

It is not surprising that my memory of those last few moments is a clouded one; I was, of all those present except the police, the only one in complete ignorance of the meaning of what was going on about me. Edith knew, and was bravely taking her risk with the others; even my dear Jane knew a little; no wonder she required her smelling salts.

Actually, out of the confusion, only two pictures remain in my mind:

One was of Greenough staring at Livingstone, and then jerking aside the curtains of the cabinet, where Halliday and Hayward had opened the panel and after turning on the red globe hanging there, were stooping over a body at the bottom of the ladder.

The other is of that figure at the foot of the stairs.

I know now that it could not have been there; that it was lying, dead of a broken neck, at the foot of the ladder. I have heard all the theories, but I cannot reconcile them with the fact. How could I have imagined it? I did not know then who was inside the wall.

I am not a spiritist, but once in every man's life comes to him the one experience which he can explain by no law of nature as he understands them.

To every man his ghost, and to me, mine.

In the dim light of the red lamp, dead though he was behind the panel, I will swear that I saw Cameron, alias Simon Bethel, standing at the foot of the stairs and looking up.

Chapter IV

Who are we to judge him? If a man sincerely believes that there is no death, the taking of life to prove it must seem a trivial thing.

He may feel, and from his book manuscript hastily hidden behind the wall of the den we gather he did feel, that the security of the individual counted as nothing against the proof of survival to the human race.

But that he was entirely sane, in those last months, none of us can believe. Cruelty is a symptom of the borderland between sanity and madness; so, too, is the weakening of what we call the Herd Instinct. It is well known at the University that for the year previous to his death he had been distinctly anti-social.

Certainly, too, he fulfilled the axiom that insanity is the exaggeration of one particular mental activity. And that he combined this single exaggeration with a high grade of intelligence only proves the close relation between madness and genius: Kant, unable to work unless gazing at a ruined tower; Hawthorne, cutting up his bits of paper; Wagner's periodical violences.

The very audacity of his disguise, the consistency with which he lived the part he was playing, points to what I believe is called dissociation; toward the last there seems to have been a genuine duality of personality; during the day old Simon Bethel, dragging his helpless foot and without effort holding his withered hand to its spastic contraction; at night, the active Cameron, making his exits on his nocturnal adventures by the gunroom window; wandering afoot incredible distances; watching the door of Gordon's room and locking him in; learning from me of Halliday's interest in the case, and trying to burn him out; very early realizing the embarrassment of my own presence at the Lodge, and warning me away by that letter from Salem, Ohio.

It seems clear that he had not expected me at the Lodge; Larkin apparently told Gordon, but Gordon neglected to inform him. Just what he felt, what terror and anger, when I greeted him at the house on his arrival will never be known. I remember now how he watched me, peering up at me through his disguising spectacles, with the beef cube in his hand, and waiting. Waiting.

But the disguise held. My own very slight acquaintance with him, my near-sightedness, my total lack of suspicion, all were in his favor. And of the perfection of the disguise, it is enough to say that Gordon apparently never suspected it. He did suspect the paralysis.

"He moved his arm today," he wrote once, in the diary. "He knows I saw it, and he has watched me ever since."

"It takes very little to change an appearance beyond casual recognition," Halliday tells me. "The idea is to take a few important points and substitute their opposites. Take a man with partial paralysis; one side of his face drops, you see. Well, he can't imitate that, but he can put a fig in the other cheek and raise it. Put hair on a bald-headed man, and watch the change. And there are other things; eyebrows now—"

MY FAVORITE STORIES

By IRVIN S. COBB

A Breath From Happy Hollywood

I HAVE often told the truthful tale of the distinguished New York theatrical magnate who told a well-known playwright that he didn't care to consider putting on the latter's newest piece called "The Dauphin," because he was sure the American people would never care for a play about a fish.

Then of course there is the tale told of that other and equally prominent manager who, on hearing a synopsis of a dramatization of "David Copperfield," said he liked the story and asked who the original author of the story might have been; and then, when the adaptor told him this honor had belonged to Charles Dickens, said promptly:

"Well, you better get in touch with this here Charley Dickens and bring him in to see me and we'll talk over the royalties, and if the guy ain't unreasonable, why we'll fix it up a contract and go ahead with the production."

But the contemporary authorities agree that for a wide and comprehensive and all-embracing ignorance of the classics these dignitaries in the realm of the spoken drama are not to be mentioned in the same admiring breath with some of the leaders of the moving-pictures industry. A man lately back from sinless Hollywood brings with him two anecdotes regarding a strictly self-made gentleman who holds an important, indeed a commanding position, in one of the biggest of the studios. This gentleman chooses subjects for screening; he casts the companies; he passes on details of location, of costuming and of treatment; he bosses the directors and he issues orders to the actors.

Not so very long ago he was told that the editorial department of his plant looked with an eye of favor on the project of making a film version of "The Hunchback of Notre Dame." Promptly he put his foot down on it.

"Nix," he said; "we positifly wouldn't do it. The public is fed up on these here college plays with football players for heroes."

A few days later he personally was supervising the taking of certain scenes of a comedy. In the script prepared from the author's scenario by the continuity writer, he came upon a line to the effect that the leading woman should be pictured as seated alone in a deep reverie.

"Come with me, you," he said indicating the assistant director, the leading lady and the cameraman. "I know just the place for taking this here piece of business."

He loaded the three of them into an automobile, got in himself and bade the driver take them along a certain road winding into the foothills above Los Angeles. After an hour or so of steady travel they came to where a narrow but precipitous canyon cut into the contours of the landscape. Here the leader of the expedition gave orders to halt.

"There you are," he stated, with a wave of his arm, "you could look for a week and nowhere you wouldn't find no deeper reverie for her to be setting in than what this one is."

A Born Diplomat

IN A southern city a colored youth applied at a leading hotel for a job as bellboy. There was a vacancy in the bell-hopping staff and the applicant, it seemed, had had experience in similar work at other hotels. The manager, liking the boy's looks, turned him over to the bell captain, who also was colored, for final examination before signing him to duty.

"De main question," began the inquisitor, "is whether you is got politeness. We insists yere 'at all our force must be respeckful an' polite."

"Huh!" said the candidate. "I not only is got politeness, I takwise also is got tact."

"Whut's de diff'unce 'tween politeness and tact?" asked the bell captain.

"A big diff'unce," said the new hand. "Listen: Lemme give you a 'lustration to prove it. De last job I had over yere at de Palace hotel, de clerk calls me one day an' he tells me to tek a armload of fresh towels up to Number 970. So I teks de towels on my arm an' goes up an' knocks at Number 970. Dey ain't no answer. So I turns de knob and finds de do' ain't locked an' I walks in. Dey ain't nobody in sight inside, so I figgers dat de guest, whoever 'twuz, w'ich wanted de towels is done gone out. So I goes across de room an' opens de bathroom do' an' dere's a strange lady settin in de bathtub. I says right quick: 'Excuse me, suh, and I backs out.

"Now, sayin' 'Scuse me' was politeness, but de 'suh' part—dat was tact!"

Seeing the Signs

"Do you know anything about palmistry, George dear?" the sweet young thing asked her suitor.

"Well, not very much," he answered, with an air of becoming modesty. "But the other evening I had a remarkable experience which might be called an example of the art."

"Oh, George," enthused the girl, "do tell me."

"Well," said George, "I looked at a friend's hand and predicted that he would shortly have some money. Before I left him he had quite a useful sum given him!"

"And you foretold that from his hand, dear?" asked the girl.

"Yes; he had the ace, king, jack and ten of trumps in it."

If Back Hurts Begin on Salts

Flush Your Kidneys Occasionally by Drinking Quarts of Good Water

No man or woman can make a mistake by flushing the kidneys occasionally, says a well-known authority. Too much rich food creates acids which clog the kidney pores so that they sluggishly filter or strain only part of the waste and poisons from the blood. Then you get sick. Rheumatism, headaches, liver trouble, nervousness, constipation, dizziness, sleeplessness, bladder disorders often come from sluggish kidneys.

The moment you feel a dull ache in the kidneys or your back hurts, or if the urine is cloudy, offensive, full of sediment, irregular of passage, or attended by a sensation of scalding, begin to drink soft water in quantities; also get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any reliable pharmacy and take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys may then act fine.

This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to help flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to activity, also to help neutralize the acids in the system so they no longer cause irritation, thus often relieving bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive and cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink, which everyone can take now and then to help keep the kidneys clean and the blood pure, thereby often preventing serious kidney complications.

Monkeys in Dentist's Chair

Twelve husky, grinning monkeys are undergoing treatment at the college of dentistry of the University of California, at present having their teeth straightened. They are kept especially to observe the effect of diet on teeth. Their teeth are much like children's, having the same number, and two sets, milk and permanent, but the monkeys differ in a vital respect. They like to go to the dentist. The doctors report that the monkeys throw back their heads and open their mouths cheerfully and seemed to chatter with interest at the goings-on.

Los Angeles Boy Needed Help

Leroy Young, 1116 Georgia St., Los Angeles, is a "regular fellow," active in sports, and at the top in his classes at school. To look at him now, you'd think he never had a day's sickness but his mother says: "When Leroy was just a little fellow, we found his stomach and bowels were weak. He kept suffering from constipation. Nothing he ate agreed with him. He was fretful, feverish and puny.

"When we started giving him California Fig Syrup his condition improved quickly. His constipation and biliousness stopped and he has had no more trouble of that kind. I have since used California Fig Syrup with him for colds and upset spells. He likes it because it tastes so good and I like it because it helps him so wonderfully!"

California Fig Syrup has been the trusted standby of mothers for over 50 years. Leading physicians recommend it. It is purely vegetable and works with Nature to regulate, tone and strengthen the stomach and bowels of children so they get full nourishment from their food and waste is eliminated in a normal way.

Four million bottles used a year shows how mothers depend on it. Always look for the word "California" on the carton to be sure of getting the genuine.

Fooled the Monk

Somebody's monkey was running around loose at Los Angeles and a policeman was delegated to catch it. He tried various traps and lures, but the monkey would not remain within arms' reach long enough to be captured. Then thinking of the old saying, "monkey see monkey do," he made a noose, thrust his head through the noose several times and then extended the trap gently toward the animal. The monkey put his head right through the noose and lost his liberty.

Acidity

The common cause of digestive difficulties is excess acid. Soda cannot alter this condition, and it burns the stomach. Something that will neutralize the acidity is the sensible thing to take. That is why physicians tell the public to use Phillips Milk of Magnesia.

One spoonful of this delightful preparation can neutralize many times its volume in acid. It acts instantly; relief is quick, and very apparent. All gas is dispelled; all sourness is soon gone; the whole system is sweetened. Do try this perfect anti-acid, and remember it is just as good for children, too, and pleasant for them to take.

Any drug store has the genuine, prescriptional product.

Had Never Been Locked

The Philadelphia Record moved to a new building. Then the front door of the old Record building had to be locked—the first time in forty-six years. And when they started looking for the key, they could not find it. In fact, no one remembered ever seeing the front door key. So a locksmith made a new key for the lock that had been nothing more than an ornamental fixture for a little less than half a century.

Fortunate He Looked

A workman's hunch probably averted a tragedy at Cedar Rapids, Iowa. A house that had been built about sixty years ago was being wrecked. The workman found a pint bottle between the walls and was in the act of hurling it among the rest of the debris when he had his hunch to examine the bottle. It was marked "nitroglycerin." The bottle was dumped in a river.

Fairhaven, Mass.—"I am taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound during the Change of Life and I think it is a wonderful tonic. When I feel nervous and run-down my husband gets me a bottle right away. It is a great help to me and I think that if other people would only take it when they feel all run-down and take it as the directions say, they would find it a great benefit. My worst symptoms were nervousness and tired feelings. I could not sleep nights and I did not care about my work. I was so nervous I would cry if anyone looked at me."—Mrs. Ada Bessr, 196 Washington Street, Fairhaven, Mass.

HOW TO LIVE LONGER

By JOHN CLARENCE FUNK

IT IS UP TO YOU

THE obesity problem seems to attract much attention these days. Those who are not fat are afraid of becoming so, and those who have already allowed themselves that luxury are bemoaning their condition.

Thus we have a commentary upon human nature and its failings. For the simple fact remains that those who are not fat, barring pathological conditions, need not become so. And those who have reached an uncomfortable stage need not have done it.

Indeed, the avoirdupois question could be quickly and effectively solved if the people who are now thin would conclude to remain that way. As a matter of fact, the time to reduce is when one does not need to do so. The reduction method at this period is merely a state of mind—a proper and rational attitude toward the food question.

When considering this question, one must not confuse a natural tendency to stoutness with obesity. The two are as far apart as are the poles. The former is according to nature, the latter is antagonistic to it. One who is pleasingly plump was likely intended to be so; and any sustained effort to acquire an unnatural thinness would be detrimental to health.

Exercise which involves a measure of muscular effort, plus enough but not too much food, in all probability will maintain the status quo. Incidentally, don't envy the thin ones. They are likely envying you.

Those of you who are really uncomfortably fat likely have only yourselves to blame for this condition. You have given your body more fuel than it required. You have fed it as if you were a wood chopper, while all the time you were sitting lazily in an office or home chair wondering what you were going to eat at the next meal. A great life! But not one that is conducive to old age.

Well, what is one to do in such a case? Three things. First, don't submit your bod, to heroic measures suggested by some well meaning but misguided friend; second, avoid all advertised reducing methods and drugs; third, make a bee line for your physician's office, submit to a thorough examination and follow to the letter the advice he gives you. He will know what you can stand by periodical checkings on the dietary he gives. It will be a hard life, but then you brought it upon yourself and you should really not complain.

If it's your nature to be reasonably stout, stay that way. If unreasonably fat, then to work. And no cheating!

SOFT BUT NOT SENSIBLE

LIVING as we do in an age of luxury and mechanical refinement much of the drudgery has been removed from our daily activities. Gas now propels us whereas formerly legs did the job. Machines of wonderful complexity and uncanny power now replace the energies expended by hundreds of thousands of hands. Science has even invaded the home where are to be found the electrical sweepers, washers, mangles and ironers.

In short, service, reducing physical energy to a minimum, can be purchased. And as the richest nation on earth, that service is bought. A fair proportion of humanity rests more or less continuously in consequence thereof.

To live in the lap of even comparative luxury is gratifying to the senses; and if the human being were all brain the idea would be a magnificent one. But the fact remains that, despite our vaunted civilization and its labor-saving devices, man's body remains the same as it always was. Merely to clothe it, overfeed it, underexercise it—as thousands are doing daily—is to shut one's eyes to the fixed law that the body requires real physical work and exercise quite as much as the stomach demands sufficient food if it is to give the best service and last the longest possible time.

Too many people absolutely disregard the work urge. "Why exert ourselves if we can pay to have some machine or some person do it for us?" they argue. But the point is that all the logic in the world will not overcome nature's necessity. It demands. And if it does not get, it flops. That is all there is to it—which is quite enough!

Men and women both were originally fabricated on the fundamental basis of the necessity of physical labor and its natural sequence—sweat. And the models haven't been changed either in substance or form since the Garden of Eden days.

Of course you are not to change your office job for a ditch-digging one but, on the other hand, muscles should be exercised daily. Put your body to work. Discover your muscles. Make your anatomy mean something more than frame upon which to hang clothes and hold up a brain. Get busy!

Made Lime Kilns of Etruscan Crematories

In ancient times cremation was practiced throughout the civilized world with the exception of Egypt, where bodies of the departed were embalmed, in Judea where they were placed in sepulchers, and in China where graves were made in the earth. In the other countries there were few exceptions to the general custom of cremation. Among these, however, might be mentioned those persons who had taken their own lives, untoothed children and persons struck by lightning.

An Italian archeologist recently discovered what he declared to be the crematories used by the Etruscans, the mysterious civilized people who preceded the Romans in that country and who vanished more than 25 centuries ago. It was discovered that the Etruscan crematories were made use of by the conquering Romans in a strangely practical way. The arched fire chambers, in which an intense fire may be maintained, were turned into lime kilns.—Detroit News.

Another Link Broken
Another link between one of the oldest families in California and one of the oldest families in France was broken by death last week, when Count Jean Louis Marie Joseph d'Andigne passed away on his estate near Tours, France. News of his death was cabled here to friends. The Count's wife died four years ago. She formerly was Miss Cecelia Catherine Coleman, the daughter of the late Mrs. J. Coleman and a brother of the late James V. Coleman, who served two terms in the legislature as assemblyman from San Mateo county. Coleman afterwards aspired to be governor, but was defeated in the Democratic convention by the late James Budd of Stockton. In the early eighties there came to Menlo Park Mrs. Macdonough and Mrs. Coleman, sisters of J. O'Brien, a member of the firm of Flood, O'Brien, Mackay and Fair, the famous Bonanza Kings who made millions on the Comstock in the seventies.

The two sisters were poor then, but inherited O'Brien's wealth, said to be forty millions. Mrs. Coleman erected a mansion in the Coleman tract, now known as Menlo Oaks. The family never occupied it and for twenty years it remained unoccupied. There was a legend current for many years to the effect that the mansion was haunted, but this story was exploded when it became known that the hideous noises heard in the early morning hours was caused by woodpeckers in depositing their acorns in the roof of the mansion. Mrs. Coleman besides her son had two beautiful daughters who were society leaders and courted by the prominent society men of the time. Out of the east came two Lochinvars, Dr. May and his brother, Henry May. They paid court to the two beautiful heiresses and won their hearts. They were married and shortly after left for Washington. After the death of the doctor, many years ago, Mrs. May, Cecelia Catherine Coleman, married the count. During the greater part of their married life Count and Countess d'Andigne lived in France, dividing their time between the d'Andigne family estate near Tours and Paris, where the countess d'Andigne was a prominent figure. Mrs. Coleman and Mrs. Macdonough have long since joined the silent caravan. The latter's son and daughter are prominent figures in the financial and social circles of New York. The son, Joseph Macdonough, is the owner of the famous Macdonough Stock Farm at Portola and spends his time between here and Gotham. In the eigthies the Colemans were famous in the social life of San Francisco and the Peninsula. James V. Coleman was a political leader in his day. He succeeded Felton in the assembly, defeating the late Horace Hawes in one of the hardest fought political battles in the history of San Mateo county. Hawes had the influence of his famous father, Horace Hawes, father of the ballot system of the state, and the man who was responsible for the consolidation act which combined the city and county of San Francisco. Coleman had the coin and spent it freely and was elected by a small vote. The late Jack Fleming managed the Coleman campaign. Of the three Coleman children only one remains. Nearly all the other actors in life's game of those days have joined the silent majority. The death of the count recalls their memory and brings back associations of long ago.

"Trading at PIGGLY WIGGLY"

BECOMES a regular thing when customers once get the real idea. There are so many ways in which the Piggly Wiggly system serves the requirements of the public more adequately.

I think the best compliment to Piggly Wiggly system and efficiency is the fact that other chains are trying to duplicate our fixtures. 'Imitation is the sincerest of flattery', and I feel like the fellows down at the office: Other chains may try to imitate our stores and fixtures, but they'll never duplicate our spirit."
